is a vast amount of "pullulinin of Anglo-Saxon liberty," etc that our laws are many of them manufac-tured by a set of graceless knaves for the purpose of giving security to the victors classes. There is not a candid lawyer to be found who will not admit the growth of corruption is rapidly making the law the protection of the criminal classes. The of criminal laws is smple enough. The laws are tolcrably well defined. The trouble lies in the fact that it is almost possible to have them executed. To be sure, it is an easy matter to convict a man or a boy or a girl for stealing chickens, or steles, or some other trifle, but murder embersiement of hundreds of a of dellars are crimes for the on of which it is exceedingly diffacult to secure convection. If there is any money in the defense, there are always planty of lawyers ready to jump at the chance, and they labor like beavers, with mere quitbles and hair plittings to defeat the ends of justice.
